As we swing in our hammocks on the ballicony of our palace, we are too lazy to do more than scho in our hearts the refrain of the lotus-eating world-seekers, "Oh, rest ye, brother marmers! we will not wander more." All about us and below us preaches the gospel of calm. The heavens are cloudless. The deep green vegetation sways gently in the languid and odorous air. There is no hurry nor jostling in the narrow street. The prosperous looking tradesmen saunter by under their wide-spreading red umberellas, that surround them with a rose-colored atmosphere. They are not tormented by any dreams of tenning in the languid and them with a rose-colored atmosphere. They are not tormented by any dreams of the or per cent. The market women roll along with a sailor like undulation; they would let their lemons sour in the baskets before they would quicken their page.

The donkeys go by in brown studies, forbefore they would quicken their pace. The donkeys go by in brown studies, forgetful of their packs. The babies roll tranquilly in the gutters like bronze Cupids ound to flirt with the flag that hange in the flag's response. A splendid green par-rot sits dozing on his perch. He nods, half loses his footing, and swears gently in Castilian. The town moves and speaks

When you have slept you are not re-reshed, and effort seems so useless and in-congruous under this languid sky that the only advantage of waking is to go to sleep satisfaction pervading the general mind. Ambition comes only in spurts and flashes. Wealth is not keenly sought; power drifts not the hands that think it worth grasping. An indolent obedience rewards usurp-ing enterprise. At the night of obstacles progress recoils into reaction. There is hardly energy enough to beget hypoorny. Sloth snores cynically in the shade, as un-ashamed as the unawaddled habies that sprawl about the doorways. Whether this state of general indolence should be charged to any specific cause, I leave philosopher and politicians to decide for themselves Some will affirm it is the chimate, which produces like results all over the world; thers will say it is the unsettled and un owners will say it is the unsettled and un-certain condition of affairs, and the doubt of the future, still others will explain that there is no money here, no incentive to ac-tivity, no promise of reward, no intelligent direction, no personal scentity.

Maryland boasts of the belle of the season, Miss Anna Williams, of Baltimore, who made her first appearance in Washington in a cherry-colored satin dress, with an overskirt of white duchesse lace looped. FRAMES with natural flowers, and the waist and bleves trimined with white point lace. Josh Billings thus defines "horne:"
"Duner horn—This is the oldest and most sakred there iz. It iz set tu musik, and plays 'Home, Sweet Home' about noon. It will arrest a nown and bring him in quicker than a sheriff's warrent. It kauses the deaf to bear and the dumb to shout for from other horns, being uv a fluid natur. It iz really more pugnashua than the ram's horn; six inches uv it will knock a man perfectly calm." It is said that once a man of small con-sequence died, and the Rev. T. K. Beecher S. B. COR. FRANKLIN AND SPRING sequence died, and the Rev. T. K. Beecher was saked to preach the funeral sermon—a man who abhors the lauding of people either dead or alive, except in dignified and sim, 'language, and then only for merits which they merely ought to have possessed. The friends of the deceased got up a stately funeral. They must have had misgivings that the corpse would not be praised strongly enough, for they prepared some manuscript headings and notes in which nothing was left unsaid on that a fervid imagination and pared some manuscript headings and notes in which nothing was left unsaid on that subject that a fervid imagination and an unabridged dictionary could compile; and these they handed to the minister as he entered the pulpit. They were merely intended as suggestions, and so the friends were filled with consternation when the minister stood up in the pulpit and proceeded to read off the curious odds and ends in ghastly detail, and in a loud voice! And their consternation solidified to retrifaction when he pansed at the end. to petrifaction when he paused at the end contemplated the multitude reflectively and then said impressively:

"The man would be a fool who tried to add anything to that. Let us pray."
